The only verdict is VENGEANCE!!!

Simply put, Fresno State (and Nevada for that matter) should burn in hell for the great WAC-stabbing of 2010.

Not to say that the guy who initiated it all, Fresno State president John Welty, doesn't have a nice cozy spot next to the prince of darnkess himself already, but this is one more thing that has the negative karma piling up higher and higher on Fresno.

Welty, who has made quite the name for himself with his extramarital affairs, sexual discrimination lawsuits against him, and tweaking school drug policies to allow athletes arrested on drug charges to not have to miss any games, added one more notch on his belt. (Thanks to the USU library databases for access to all this info!!!)

Even though we're pretty sure USU's conference situation is going to turn out just fine, it was still a total dick move by Fresno State. We can't seem to figure out the appeal of a conference that no longer includes Utah and BYU, and is probably going to be losing TCU sooner rather than later, all the while locked into a horrible TV contract that offers little-to-no national exposure.

But, Welty has the history of bad decisions, and I guess you've got to applaud his consistency.

What this comes down to though is that this will be Fresno's last trip to Logan for football in the WAC, and Utah State's last chance to stick it to Fresno at home before they leave the WAC for what they are hoping are greener pastures. We're not so convinced it's all going to work out so well for them.

Some announcements before next game: BYU

Hopefully this section doesn't apply to anybody reading this, but it just might be applicable to somebody you know, and possibly once loved (before finding out their closet allegiances to BYU).

Since there are those out there who attend Utah State, but for some god-forsaken reason have any kind of non-hateful feelings towards BYU, we hope this message will reach them with ample time for them to come to their senses before the game on Oct. 1.

If you are dumb enough to go as far as wear a BYU shirt on campus any time, especially the week of the game, just understand that any and all projectiles that might hit you in the side of the head were brought upon by your own damn self!!!

Note The Bull Sheet does not condone, nor encourage violence of any manner, but also would not refrain from falling on the floor laughing from seeing somebody in a BYU shirt on USU's campus get totally domed by an empty Gatorade bottle or something.

All of the "I don't want to support a football team that sucks" talk is no longer valid, especially after BYU got their @$es handed to them last week on the road against Air Force... Freaking Air Force!!! No offense to the Falcons, they run a great program, but USU is going on the road and nearly knocking off Oklahoma while BYU goes to Air Force and gets bent over like they did?

Speaking of apparel...

If it weren't for the wonderful people at ScrewTheY.com, this year's Bull Sheet might not be happening. There also would be a lot fewer t-shirts bashing BYU on the internet.

They've got some excellent stuff, which everyone should check out, and then order now to get it in time for the BYU game on Oct. 1. The ESPN cameras are sure to love them, and to top it off, all your USU friends will think you are awesome.

A recap of the love we've been getting

More than a few of the players have said that last Saturday was the best atmosphere that they've ever played in at Romney Stadium.

Gary Andersen said that he even had a couple recruits call him with a little more interest in USU because they saw pictures and had heard all about how epic the crowd was last Saturday.

Now the important thing is to build on that. Last week was just shaking the rust, and a bit tough to really go nuts for since we all knew it was going to be a blowout. This week the crowd needs to be on its A-game, because this game is huge!!!

Fresno State

Bull Sheet scouting report A game preview

Fresno State is getting all sorts of crazy hype after their week one victory over Cincinnati, which in fairness, looked rather impressive at the time. After Cincinnati got run over by NC State Thursday night, it's looking like a much less impressive win.

Still, Fresno State brings a solid team to Logan for a huge early-season WAC game that will hold major implications on the final standings. In other words, this game is huge.

Fresno returns a solid quarterback from last year in senior Ryan Colburn, along with a very good offensive line, but missing is first round NFL draft pick Ryan Matthews, who simply put, ate the Aggies alive last year. The Bulldogs are also a bit thinned out at wide receiver, leaving Colburn without a lot of his weapons. If USU's blitzing schemes are able to get through to Colburn, it could be a rough day for the Fresno offense.

Along that same line, Fresno State's defensive line looked stellar in their opener, but have the tall task of trying to chase down Diondre Borel (good freakin' luck!). If Diondre is able to buy time with his feet like he did against Oklahoma, the USU receivers should be able to get open to make some big plays and keep the offense moving. It all comes down to the lines this game though.

In the next Bull Sheet...

- Disgruntled BYU fans flood the Facebook walls of their friends at Utah State to shamefully admit that Riley Nelson does indeed suck, just like most USU people predicted.

- The Bull Sheet actually makes an issue for the third home game of the year, rather than end up in the god damn hospital with swine flu and pneumonia (again).

Stadium Domination: A constant work in progress

Just like how we've constantly been trying new things at The Spectrum (remember two short years ago there had never been an "I Believe" or a "Winning Team/Losing Team"), we have a little refining to do here at Romney.

The nice thing about this is that we've got our feet wet this season now. We've seen what works, what doesn't work, and what we need to push a little harder to make happen. With that said, let's perfect this whole thing!

Tweaking the "I believe" timing

Last week, we had no idea exactly how the pre-game routine would go with the coin toss, intro video and eventually kick-off.

This week, and for future weeks, we will be starting the "I believe" chant as the captains are walking out for the coin toss. Really, nobody gives a crap about the coin toss, and it'd be the most prime-time to have the entire stadium quiet for us to spark up the energy in there.

Patching up the other issues...

Third Downs - You know how sometimes in The Spectrum we all get just off the-efing wall loud? Usually during tense moments or big runs? Well that is what every third down on defense needs to be.

If you throw three fingers in the air, that means it's time to let your vocal chords belt out everything they've got, and then some. But when the other team breaks their huddle, drop the three fingers and clap some to add to the volume even more.

Yell like hell, and clap like hell to go with it. Maybe even jump around some to get amped up. Yelling + clapping = 2x the noise. (*Note - Fafner got an A- in Math 1010 last summer, so he knows his s with that).

Crowd push-ups - Sure it's a complete rehash of last week's bottom section in here, but seriously people, do more crowd push-ups. If you ever think all your friends are too heavy to do them, just remember that two years ago we once threw Bill in the air 14 times. Not easy!
