Riley Nelson redefines the term, "life-pwned"

When Riley Nelson decided to transfer from Utah State, the school he allegedly grew up a fan of, to go play for BYU, he set himself up to forever be hated by essentially everybody at Utah State.

Then, somehow Nelson won the starting quarterback job at BYU to start this season, and continued to be the quarterback that helped lead Utah State to arguably its worst season in school history, leaving him as a hated man among fans of the very school that he defected to. As if having to be at BYU wasn't already bad enough (that's where the real "life-pwnage" comes into play)

Football-wise, Nelson never quite had what it takes to be a Division-1 quarterback. He's got a weak arm, with only average accuracy to go along with being undersized. It's those reasons why anybody who really follows and knows college football could have told you that losing Nelson was never going to have any major impact on the progression of the USU program.

Cougar fans revel in the Nelson transfer as some kind of moral victory in kicking USU while it was down, but seeing as how they've all come to hate Nelson too from how he's led them to a 1-3 record, it almost seems like Utah State has the last laugh... and Diondre Borel... We've got that going for us too.

Promises of a machete were, admittedly, false...

Along with Riley Nelson, also not appearing at tonight's game will be the vicious slaughter of any people in the USU student section wearing BYU apparel by way of a machete. That was just a joke on the Facebook event for the game. You should have been about to figure that out on your own.

Murderous rampages are generally frowned upon here at The Bull Sheet, but maybe, just maybe, somebody was inspired enough by that empty threat to keep from doing something as stupid as wearing BYU apparel at Romney Stadium.

It doesn't hurt to at least try, right?

Speaking of not appearing in this game...

While our friend Riley won't be playing tonight partly due to injury, and largely due to lack of talent, another would-be member of the BYU football team is out with a season-ending lack of morality (by BYU standards, obviously).

Runningback Harvey Unga, in a nutshell, got honor coded this past offseason with what could probably be described as an at-home re-enactment of the 2007 hit comedy "Knocked Up", only with way less attractive actors, fewer laughs and a definite abundance of shame by everyone involved. Just imagine the normal scenes from a movie where a couple is expecting a baby and trying to choose the perfect doctor for the birth, and then picture those scenes happening in the BYU Honor Code office, and instead of a doctor, it's a person whose job description involves kicking people out of school for that kind of stuff.

In a way this is upsetting that Unga did in fact leave BYU after this encounter, even though they undoubtedly would have bent the rules to reinstate him for the football season. We were hoping to bust out the "Keep your pants on" chant one last time, but at the same time, we're a little bit happy to see Harvey go, seeing as how he sort of ran a train on USU's defense the past few years.

On a semi-related note, our awesome sponsors at ScrewTheY.com have a straight-up hilarious shirt bashing on Unga that everyone needs to see/buy. It was described by one Salt Lake sports talk radio host as being "below the belt", but if Harvey had never gone below the belt in the first place, this whole mess could have been avoided.

Just remember, our grass is always greener

While the outcomes of the games are always unpredictable, the one thing to remember through all of this is that at the end of the day, we still have an actual college atmosphere at Utah State.

We can have members of the opposite sex into our bedrooms, and we can do whatever the hell we want without having to worry about getting kicked out of school (HARVEY!!!). You can go out to the bar or a party and enjoy some adult beverages without having to answer to anybody about it. Hell, you can even grow a beard!

Of course that is all if you want to. If not that's cool too. You at least have that freedom to choose and that is why in the game of life, Utah State will always own BYU.

Plus, have you ever looked around at how insanely nerdy the people at BYU games are??? Thank god you're not one of them!

Bull Sheet scouting report A game preview

This is officially one of those games where it seems like anything could happen. BYU has one decent win on the year and three blowout losses. Utah State has one decent win, two pretty bad losses and one near earth-shaking upset that just barely fell short.

BYU's offense ranks in at No. 98 while Utah State's is No. 60. Defensively, BYU is No. 102, while USU is at No. 88.

BYU has probably played a little bit tougher schedule, but also has failed to stay competitive in their last three games.

Offensively the Cougars are anchored by runningback JJ Di Luigi, who is both the leading rusher and receiver on the year. Can't help but think that he and Bobby Wagner will be meeting plenty during this game.

At Quarterback for the Cougars will be freshman Jake Heaps, who takes over as the full-time starter now that Riley Nelson is out for the year with a shoulder injury. Heaps has yet to find his groove at the college level, but also hasn't had much of an opportunity to do so.

The amount of pressure the Aggies are able to place on Heaps, while still containing Di Luigi look to be the keys to the game. A resurgence from the USU offense wouldn't hurt the Aggies' chances either.

In the next Bull Sheet...

- Harvey Unga buys a "Where's Harvey?" t-shirt.

- The Hawaii Rainbows attempt to get fired up for a game by watching the Youtube videos of "double rainbow guy"

- Riley Nelson's career continues to go south, both figuratively and literally, as he attempts to save his career at SUU in 2011.

Stadium Domination: Our unstoppable force in the making...

Alright... We've got our feet wet, we've tweaked some things, and we've ditched some ideas that may or may not have sucked...

Now it's time to ramp things up to a whole new level. This is the point in the season where the team is in need of something to pick them back up. Not too different from last basketball season when the team started off 1-2 after an early road trip before coming home and putting things back together to blowout a couple teams and then beat the piss out of none other than BYU.

Visit The Bull Sheet's sponsor at...

The internet's number one source for t-shirts, jokes, and embarrassing photos for everything anti-BYU.

Be loud as hell on defense, and especially loud on third downs. If your voice is too shredded to yell, clap like crazy.

One offense, KEEP IT QUIET!!! This is one thing that's still imperfect. We all want to drop a "Let's go Aggies" chant, but when our team is in the huddle or lining up it NEEDS to be quiet. Go crazy after the play obviously, but then get back to silence.

And don't forget that we're constantly making impressions on recruits who visit USU.

This weekend, as far as we know, there are big time recruits in town for both men's and women's basketball, as well as a football recruit who could potentially be the next superstar quarterback for Utah State (*COUGH* Chuckie *COUGH*)... But we don't want to name names.

Our atmosphere at basketball games has always done the convincing for us to recruits, and Romney should be no different by now. This place should be impossible to say "no" to for any recruit, and if we really are that bad ass of a crowd, this whole athletic department will be the unstoppable force that it should be.
