Halford finally puts on freshman-15

USU freshman redshirt Skyler Halford finally experienced something all first year college students go through this past week, even if it was a little late in coming, when he finally gained the fabled freshman-15. The freshman-15 is the typical amount of weight the average college student gains during their first couple months of school. Halford had been lucky so far, keeping in shape with basketball practices but over the Christmas break he finally gave in to temptation. "Gossner Foods gave all the players for this tournament thing all kinds of free chesses and I just couldn't resist" Halford said.

"I came back to our dorm one day and just found cheese wrappers all over the floor and Skyler passed out on the couch with his shirt off." roommate Brady Jardine said.

"They were just so delicious I couldn't stop" Halford added.

When reached for comment assistant coach Tim Duryea said Halford would run extra laps to lose the cheese weight. "I don't blame him though, that cheese is phenomenal," Duryea said. "I put it on pretty much everything"

Jardine to co-star in Nike shoe ad

Freshman Brady Jardine was signed on earlier this week to star alongside L.A. Lakers star Kobe Bryant in the sequel to Bryant's famed shoe commercial in which he jumps over a moving car.

"They want me to jump over Kobe, while Kobe is jumping over the car," Jardine said. "Let that concept blow your mind for a sec!"

Despite the danger of a moving vehicle and another person being underneath him in the stunt, Jardine is confident his 87.5-inch vertical leap will be enough to finish the commercial unharmed.

"I know Kobe can get up there, so I figure I'll tuck my knees in a little bit to be safe," Jardine said. "I mean... I'm Brady freakin Jardine. What could go wrong?"

While a deal is not yet finalized, talks are already in the works for Jardine to star in his own shoe commercial once his collegiate eligibility has run its course.

"Pretty much they want me to show up Kobe in every way possible," Jardine said. "Ever seen anybody jump over a moving 18-wheeler? Not yet you haven't. You just wait."

In All Honesty: A game preview

Judging Houston Baptist by their shooting during warm-ups before their game Monday against Wyoming, this game is going to be pretty ugly. They seem like really nice guys, just not very good basketball players. This game shouldn't be too much of a different result from yesterday however. Gordon Watt and Baron Sauls both score over 16 points per game for the Huskies, but also average over three turnovers a game each. We're hoping for much more Clint Lee tonight. He'd better score this time though.

What we learned on day 1 of the Duel

We learned in day 1 that Jared Quayle can throw it down if he feels like it. We learned that Houston Baptist is a nice bunch of guys that we feel deserve a break from our heckling. Wyoming's Brandon Ewing got more crap than anyone Monday and took it like a champ. Sad that we'll have to hate him for a couple hours on Wednesday, but such is life. We also learned that Kyle Whelliston is absolutely NOT a fan of mini-balls flying every which way. In fairness, it does get pretty crazy. Not sure why everybody needs their own DOZEN to take home to the family, but oh well.

The Petri Dish - Twisting the knife on a team that is already 0-13

Team - Mascot is the Huskies, which seems a bit odd of them to have a traditionally cold-weather dog for a team in Houston.

#3 Sean Morris - On his third different college. Played two years at Colorado State and spent a redshirt year at New Orleans. Son of NBA and Utah Jazz "great" Chris Morris.

#4 Demetrus Judge - Nickname is "Meachie". According to his myspace, the movie Titanic makes him cry. Simulated motions and yellings of "I'm the King of the World" and "Never let go Jack" are highly encouraged in his direction.

#11 Justin Wilson - Is 5'6, which means it's time yet again to bring the "Gary Coleman" chant off the shelf. Transferred to Houston Baptist from Texas Southern. His current status on Myspace is, "Frustrated". Mood expected to continue.

#12 Baron Sauls - Transfer from University of Texas-Arlington.

#21 Gordon Watt - Transfer from Purdue University.

#22 Michael Moss - Transfer from St. Edwards University.

#25 Jimmy Sanders - Big fan of the Harry Potter books.

#44 Emanuel Willis - Transfer from Auburn University.

#45 Mario Flaherty - Lists Greg Ostertag among his basketball heroes. Do whatever you want with that one...
